Smaller Government

Report, Together with Formal Minutes, Oral and Written Evidence

The Stationery Office In this report the Public Administration Select Committee (PASC) argues that the Government appoints too many ministers and should reduce their number by the middle of the Parliament, As it devolves real power and responsibility to local communities. And following the decision to cut the number of MPs in the House of Commons from 650 to 600, The Committee finds further scope for reductions. 141 MPs are currently on the 'payroll vote' as ministers or their Parliamentary aides. If this number remains static at the same time as MPs are cut, it will effectively increase the payroll vote - further strengthening the Executive at the expense of Parliament. PASC urges three steps on the Government to reduce this power of patronage: The current legal cap on the number of paid ministers should set the absolute limit; the legal limit on the number of ministers in the Commons should be cut by eight; the number of PPSs should be limited to one per department - a reduction of 26. The report recommends a review of ministerial numbers to reflect the smaller government. Ministers' time is not always well spent and the report identifies a number of ways in which the Government could therefore refocus ministers' work and make them more effective. The Committee believes it should ultimately be possible to cut the number of ministers to a total of 80, shared between the Commons and the Lords.

Coalfield Communities, Fourth Report of Session

House of Commons Papers 2003-04, 44-1. Report Together with Formal Minutes, Oral and Written Evidence

The closures of coalfields in the 1980s and 1990s caused the loss of more than 250,000 jobs and left a legacy of high unemployment, social deprivation and environmental degradation. This report looks at: policies to create employment; the reclamation and regeneration of sites; links with health, welfare and education; the role and responsibilities of the various agencies; funding. One of the conclusions is that the plethora of initiatives has been poorly coordinated. Funding for many of the programmes is due to run out but there are no clear transitional arrangements.

Draft Animal Welfare Bill, First Report of Session

House of Commons Papers 2004-05, 52-1. [Vol. 1] Report, Together with Formal Minutes, And Lists of Oral, Written and Unprinted Evidence

The draft Animal Welfare Bill (Cm 6252, ISBN 0101625227), published in July 2004, seeks to consolidate and modernise the current law in England and Wales in line with current animal welfare standards. Amongst its provisions, the draft Bill seeks to establish a duty of care to ensure the welfare of all kept animals, enabling animal welfare organisations to intervene where there is evidence an animal is being kept in conditions likely to lead to suffering, rather than having to wait for evidence that the animal has suffered abuse before legal action can be taken. The Committee's report welcomes the Government's initiative of seeking to modernise and improve animal welfare legislation and supports the introduction of the new welfare offence. However, it also highlights a number of issues which need to be addressed before a final Bill is introduced into Parliament and makes 101 recommendations suggesting modifications either to the draft Bill itself or to its underlying policy.
